Connecting and empowering the world of infrastructure and project financing

Your online guide to IPFA 2020
April – August 2020
IPFA remains your go-to platform for connectivity and knowledge sharing. As your home for thought leadership we will continue to bring our global community together to connect, share and stay up to date through various online platforms.

We will drive our global content through webinars, expert interviews and reports, virtual discussions and roundtables, live Q&As, as well as a CV19 Hub, all of which are available to members, and detailed in this guide.

Regional activities
Where possible, regional briefings and seminars will be held virtually, and open for members within the region to join.

Global activities
We will continue to drive our global content online including webinar series, expert interviews and reports, which are available to all members.

Energy Transition webinar series

The global energy supply is in transition from traditional fossil fuels to low carbon and renewable sources. This shift needs to progress substantially if we are to meet climate goals, meaning that the energy industry is sure to face disruption over the next few decades. The movement towards renewables is only part of the evolution; the development of and investment into the infrastructure needed to enable the transition are just as important.

The webinar series will explore how this will shape future energy infrastructure assets and investment in the years to come.

Given the rapid evolution of technology over the last 30 years, it was only a matter of time for traditional infrastructure to become ‘digital’ and for digital technology to be considered ‘infrastructure’. When it comes to defining this, do assets even have to be physical, and to what extent can software demonstrate infrastructure-like characteristics?

Irrespective of labels, the demand for investable assets has increased and with that comes different risk profiles and models. So what do we mean by Infratech? Where are the opportunities and how can we get comfortable with the new risks?

This webinar series will provide a unique insight into the current trends and opportunities as well as examine how technology and infrastructure are converging to create worlds of the future.
